Two brothers, Jean and Pierre Lebrun, lived in a big house in the pretty village of Roissy. They often played in the garden or in the woods. One day, while running on the lawn, they saw a little grey rabbit which was trembling with fear behind some flowers.

They picked up the rabbit and carried it into the house where they gave it some water. They showed the animal to their mother who explained to their father what had happened. "You must try to find the owner", he replied.

They spoke to all the neighbours but no-one had lost a rabbit. "If you want, we will keep it for a few days" said the parents, "but it must belong to someone". For the moment, the children were able to play with the animal.

After a week, the father made a large wooden cage which he installed in a corner of the garden. Unfortunately, the next morning, the telephone rang. It was the owner of the rabbit. A friend had told him that the family had found it.

The children were very sad to see the animal leave. However, their parents promised to buy another rabbit for them. "After all", said M Lebrun, "there is a lovely cage which is empty now and it is nice to have an animal".
