1 Read carefully the poem below. It is about a boy, Bahadour, who has left his family and his home in Nepal to work as a poorly paid street-seller in another country. The flying of kites, often diamond in shape, is an ancient tradition and popular activity throughout the region.

How does the poet suggest what it means to the boy to fly his kite?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- how kite-flying at dusk reconnects the boy with his past life
- the significance of this moment for all the boys
- how the poet contrasts kite-flying with the boy's day-to-day life.

Bahadour

The sun stamps his shadow on the wall and he's left one wheel of his bicycle spinning. It is dusk, there are a few minutes before he must pedal his wares¹ through the streets again. But now, nothing is more important than his kite working its way into the wobbly winter sky.

For the time he can live at the summit of his head without a ticket, he is following the kite through pastures of snow where his father calls into the mountains for him, where his mother weeps his farewell into the carriages of a five-day train. You can see so many boys out on the rooftops this time of day, surrendering diamonds to the thin blue air, putting their arms up, neither in answer nor apprehension, but because the day tenders² them a coupon of release.

He does not think about the failing light, nor of how his legs must mint³ so many steel suns from a bicycle's wheel each day, nor of how his life must drop like a token into its appropriate slot; not even of constructing whatever angles would break the deal that transacted⁴ away his childhood nor of taking some fairness back to Nepal, but only of how he can find purchase on whatever minutes of dusk are left to raise a diamond, to claim some share of hope, some acre of sky within a hard-fisted budget; and of how happy he is, yielding, his arms up, equivalent now only to himself, a last spoke in the denominations⁵ of light.

¹wares: articles for sale

²tenders: offers

³mint: make (new coins) ⁴transacted: traded

⁵denominations: units of money or value

Read carefully the following extract from the opening of a novel. Lila, or 'the child', is an orphaned young girl who lives in poverty in a house with people ('they') who neglect her. Doll is a homeless young woman who sometimes works and sleeps at the house. She has begun to take care of Lila. Lila remembers the night when Doll found her outside the house and decided to take her away.

How does the writer movingly portray this event in Lila's life?

To help you answer this question, you might consider:

- how the writer portrays the ways in which Doll takes care of Lila
- the writer's use of the night-time setting and the weather
- how she portrays the developing relationship between Lila and Doll.

When the child stayed under the table they would forget her most of the time.

Doll may have been the loneliest woman in the world, and she was the loneliest child, and there they were, the two of them together, keeping each other warm in the rain.
