Section A: Theory and methods

Answer Question 1.

1 Source A*Rosenthal and Jacobson 'Pygmalion in the Classroom' (1968)

Rosenthal and Jacobson designed an experiment to test the hypothesis that teachers' expectations of their pupils' ability creates a self-fulfilling prophecy.

They selected a random sample of 20% of primary school pupils in California. The researchers then gave these pupils an IQ test. Their teachers were given false test results, where pupils with high scores were selected at random. These were not necessarily the pupils with the highest IQ scores.

The pupils were then given a second IQ test eight months later. Those pupils with a high score in the false test had made the greatest gains in IQ.

The results of the experiment appeared to support Rosenthal and Jacobson's hypothesis that the way teachers interact with pupils with higher IQ scores encouraged those pupils to do better in school.

- (a) Identify two reasons why researchers might use a random sample. [2]
- (b) Identify two methods that might be used to research classroom behaviour. [2]
- (c) Using information from Source A, describe two ways in which field experiments might be unethical. [4]
- (d) Describe two reasons for using a hypothesis in sociological research. [4]
- (e) Describe two strengths and two limitations of using the structuralist approach in sociological research. [8]
- (f) Explain why research using one method may not be accurate. [10]
- (g) To what extent does bias impact on the validity of field experiments? [15]

Answer either Question 2 or Question 3.

Section B: Culture, identity and socialisation

- 2 In 1981 Anne Oakley conducted a study into socialisation in the family. She found children were being taught how to be males and females. Parents used both manipulation and canalisation to help children learn their gender identity.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'canalisation'? [2]
- (b) Describe two examples of manipulation. [4]
- (c) Explain how agencies of socialisation, apart from the family, help to develop gender identity. [6]
- (d) Explain why the family is viewed by many sociologists as the most important agency of socialisation. [8]
- (e) To what extent is a person's status ascribed at birth? [15]

Section C: Social inequality

- 3 The concept of the underclass is used in everyday speech to describe people living at the margins of society who rely on state benefits to make ends meet. However, the concept has been rejected by many sociologists such as Charles Murray. They have focused on the cultural deviancies of the so-called underclass, blaming them for their situation.
- (a) What is meant by the term 'underclass'? [2]
- (b) Describe two forms of social stratification, apart from social class. [4]
- (c) Explain how social class might affect a person's life chances. [6]
- (d) Explain why it is believed the underclass are to blame for their own situation. [8]
- (e) To what extent is wealth the main cause of inequality? [15]
