JANE AUSTEN: Pride and Prejudice

- 1 Either (a) What, in your view, is the significance of the relationship between Lydia and Wickham to the novel's meaning and effects?
- Or (b) Paying close attention to language, tone and narrative methods, discuss the following passage, showing what it adds to Austen's presentation of the Bennet family here and elsewhere in the novel.

It was an evening of no common delight to them all; the satisfaction of Miss Bennet's mind gave a glow of such sweet animation to her face, as made her look handsomer than ever. Kitty simpered and smiled, and hoped her turn was coming soon. Mrs Bennet could not give her consent, or speak her approbation in terms warm enough to satisfy her feelings, though she talked to Bingley of nothing else, for half an hour; and when Mr Bennet joined them at supper, his voice and manner plainly shewed how really happy he was.

Not a word, however, passed his lips in allusion to it, till their visitor took his leave for the night; but as soon as he was gone, he turned to his daughter and said, 'Jane, I congratulate you. You will be a very happy woman.'

10

Jane went to him instantly, kissed him, and thanked him for his goodness.

'You are a good girl,' he replied, 'and I have great pleasure in thinking you will be so happily settled. I have not a doubt of your doing very well together. Your tempers are by no means unlike. You are each of you so complying, that nothing will ever be resolved on; so easy, that every servant will cheat you; and so generous, that you will always exceed your income.'

'I hope not so. Imprudence or thoughtlessness in money matters, would be unpardonable in me.'

'Exceed their income! My dear Mr Bennet,' cried his wife, 'what are you talking of? Why, he has four or five thousand a-year, and very likely more.' Then addressing her daughter, 'Oh! my dear, dear Jane, I am so happy! I am sure I sha'n't get a wink of sleep all night. I knew how it would be. I always said it must be so, at last. I was sure you could not be so beautiful for nothing! I remember, as soon as ever I saw him, when he first came into Hertfordshire last year, I thought how likely it was that you should come together. Oh! he is the handsomest young man that ever was seen!'

Wickham, Lydia, were all forgotten. Jane was beyond competition her favourite child. At that moment, she cared for no other. Her youngest sisters soon began to make interest with her for objects of happiness which she might in future be able to dispense.

30

Mary petitioned for the use of the library at Netherfield; and Kitty begged very hard for a few balls there every winter.

Bingley, from this time, was of course a daily visitor at Longbourn; coming frequently before breakfast, and always remaining till after supper; unless when some barbarous neighbour, who could not be enough detested, had given him an invitation to dinner, which he thought himself obliged to accept.

35

Elizabeth had now but little time for conversation with her sister; for while he was present, Jane had no attention to bestow on any one else; but she found herself considerably useful to both of them, in those hours of separation that must sometimes occur. In the absence of Jane, he always attached himself to Elizabeth, for the pleasure of talking of her; and when Bingley was gone, Jane constantly sought the same means of relief.

40

'He has made me so happy,' said she, one evening, 'by telling me, that he was totally ignorant of my being in town last spring! I had not believed it possible.'

'I suspected as much,' replied Elizabeth. 'But how did he account for it?'

45

'It must have been his sister's doing. They were certainly no friends to his acquaintance with me, which I cannot wonder at, since he might have chosen so much more advantageously in many respects. But when they see, as I trust they will, that their brother is happy with me, they will learn to be contented, and we shall be on good terms again; though we can never be what we once were to each other.'

50

'That is the most unforgiving speech,' said Elizabeth, 'that I ever heard you utter. Good girl! It would vex me, indeed, to see you again the dupe of Miss Bingley's pretended regard.'

GEOFFREY CHAUCER: The Merchant's Prologue and Tale

- 2 Either (a) In what ways and with what effects does Chaucer present different attitudes to husbands in The Merchant's Prologue and Tale?
- Or (b) Paying close attention to poetic methods, discuss the following extract, showing what it adds to Chaucer's presentation of Damyan and May and their relationship in The Merchant's Prologue and Tale.

'That me forthynketh,' quod this Januarie,
 'He is a gentil squier, by my trouthe!
 If that he deyde, it were harm and routhe.
 He is as wys, discreet, and as secree
 As any man I woot of his degree, 5
 And therto manly, and eek servysable,
 And for to been a thrifty man right able.
 But after mete, as soone as evere I may,
 I wol myself visite hym, and eek May,
 To doon hym al the confort that I kan.' 10
 And for that word hym blessed every man,
 That of his bountee and his gentillesse
 He wolde so conforten in siknesse
 His squier, for it was a gentil dede.
 'Dame,' quod this Januarie, 'taak good hede, 15
 At after-mete ye with youre wommen alle,
 Whan ye han been in chambre out of this halle,
 That alle ye go se this Damyan.
 Dooth hym disport – he is a gentil man;
 And telleth hym that I wol hym visite, 20
 Have I no thyng but rested me a lite;
 And spede yow faste, for I wole abyde
 Til that ye slepe faste by my syde.'
 And with that word he gan to hym to calle
 A squier, that was marchal of his halle, 25
 And tolde hym certeyn thynges, what he wolde.
 This fresshe May hath streight hir wey yholde
 With alle hir wommen unto Damyan.
 Doun by his beddes syde sit she than,
 Confortynge hym as goodly as she may. 30
 This Damyan, whan that his tyme he say,
 In secree wise his purs and eek his bille,
 In which that he ywriten hadde his wille,
 Hath put into hire hand, withouten moore,
 Save that he siketh wonder depe and soore, 35
 And softly to hire right thus seyde he:
 'Mercy! And that ye nat discovere me,
 For I am deed if that this thyng be kyd.'
 This purs hath she inwith hir bosom hyd
 And wente hire wey; ye gete namoore of me. 40
 But unto Januarie ycomen is she,
 That on his beddes syde sit ful softe.
 He taketh hire, and kisseth hire ful ofte,
 And leyde hym doun to slepe, and that anon.
 She feyned hire as that she moste gon 45
 Ther as ye woot that every wight moot neede;

And whan she of this bille hath taken heede,
She rente it al to cloutes atte laste,
And in the pryvee softlyt it caste.

JOHN DONNE: Selected Poems

- 3 Either (a) In what ways and with what effects does Donne present despair? You should refer to three poems in your answer.
- Or (b) Paying close attention to poetic methods, discuss the following poem, considering Donne's presentation of lovers here and elsewhere in the selection.

Elegy 19: To his Mistress Going to Bed

Come, Madam, come, all rest my powers defy,
 Until I labour, I in labour lie.
 The foe oft-times having the foe in sight,
 Is tired with standing though they never fight.
 Off with that girdle, like heaven's zone glistening, 5
 But a far fairer world encompassing.
 Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
 That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopped there.
 Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime 10
 Tells me from you, that now 'tis your bed time.
 Off with that happy busk, which I envy,
 That still can be, and still can stand so nigh.
 Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
 As when from flowery meads th' hill's shadow steals.
 Off with that wiry coronet and show 15
 The hairy diadem which on you doth grow;
 Now off with those shoes, and then safely tread
 In this love's hallowed temple, this soft bed.
 In such white robes heaven's angels used to be 20
 Received by men; thou angel bring'st with thee
 A heaven like Mahomet's paradise; and though
 Ill spirits walk in white, we easily know
 By this these angels from an evil sprite,
 Those set our hairs, but these our flesh upright.
 Licence my roving hands, and let them go 25
 Before, behind, between, above, below.
 O my America, my new found land,
 My kingdom, safeliest when with one man manned,
 My mine of precious stones, my empery,
 How blessed am I in this discovering thee! 30
 To enter in these bonds, is to be free;
 Then where my hand is set, my seal shall be.
 Full nakedness, all joys are due to thee.
 As souls unbodied, bodies unclothed must be,
 To taste whole joys. Gems which you women use 35
 Are like Atlanta's balls, cast in men's views,
 That when a fool's eye lighteth on a gem,
 His earthly soul may covet theirs, not them.
 Like pictures, or like books' gay coverings made
 For laymen, are all women thus arrayed; 40
 Themselves are mystic books, which only we
 Whom their imputed grace will dignify
 Must see revealed. Then since I may know,
 As liberally, as to a midwife, show
 Thyself: cast all, yea, this white linen hence, 45

Here is no penance, much less innocence.

To teach thee, I am naked first, why then
What needst thou have more covering than a man.

GEORGE ELIOT: Middlemarch

- 4 Either (a) In what ways and with what effects does Eliot explore some of the relationships between older and younger generations in the novel Middlemarch?
- Or (b) Paying close attention to language, tone and narrative methods, discuss the following passage, showing what it adds to Eliot's presentation of Celia Brooke here and elsewhere in the novel.

Celia's face had the shadow of a pouting expression in it, the full presence of the pout being kept back by an habitual awe of Dorothea and principle; two associated facts which might show a mysterious electricity if you touched them incautiously. To her relief, Dorothea's eyes were full of laughter as she looked up.

'What a wonderful little almanac you are, Celia! Is it six calendar or six lunar months?' 5

'It is the last day of September now, and it was the first of April when uncle gave them to you. You know, he said that he had forgotten them till then. I believe you have never thought of them since you locked them up in the cabinet here.'

'Well, dear, we should never wear them, you know.' Dorothea spoke in a full cordial tone, half caressing, half explanatory. She had her pencil in her hand, and was making tiny side-plans on a margin. 10

Celia coloured, and looked very grave. 'I think, dear, we are wanting in respect to mamma's memory, to put them by and take no notice of them. And,' she added, after hesitating a little, with a rising sob of mortification, 'necklaces are quite usual now; and Madame Poinçon, who was stricter in some things even than you are, used to wear ornaments. And Christians generally – surely there are women in heaven now who wore jewels.' Celia was conscious of some mental strength when she really applied herself to argument. 15

'You would like to wear them?' exclaimed Dorothea, an air of astonished discovery animating her whole person with a dramatic action which she had caught from that very Madame Poinçon who wore the ornaments. 'Of course, then, let us have them out. Why did you not tell me before? But the keys, the keys!' She pressed her hands against the sides of her head and seemed to despair of her memory. 20

'They are here,' said Celia, with whom this explanation had been long meditated and prearranged. 25

'Pray open the large drawer of the cabinet and get out the jewel-box.'

The casket was soon open before them, and the various jewels spread out, making a bright parterre on the table. It was no great collection, but a few of the ornaments were really of remarkable beauty, the finest that was obvious at first being a necklace of purple amethysts set in exquisite gold-work, and a pearl cross with five brilliants in it. Dorothea immediately took up the necklace and fastened it round her sister's neck, where it fitted almost as closely as a bracelet; but the circle suited the Henrietta-Maria style of Celia's head and neck, and she could see that it did, in the pier-glass opposite. 30

'There, Celia! you can wear that with your Indian muslin. But this cross you must wear with your dark dresses.' 35

Celia was trying not to smile with pleasure. 'O Dodo, you must keep the cross yourself.'

'No, no, dear, no,' said Dorothea, putting up her hand with careless deprecation. 40

'Yes, indeed you must; it would suit you – in your black dress, now,' said Celia, insistingly. 'You might wear that.'

'Not for the world, not for the world. A cross is the last thing I would wear as a trinket.' Dorothea shuddered slightly.

'Then you will think it wicked in me to wear it,' said Celia, uneasily.
'No, dear no,' said Dorothea, stroking her sister's cheek. 'Souls have complexions too: what will suit one will not suit another.'

THOMAS HARDY: Far from the Madding Crowd

- 5 Either (a) In what ways and with what effects does Hardy explore friendship in Far from the Madding Crowd?
- Or (b) Paying close attention to language, tone and narrative methods, discuss Hardy's presentation of Bathsheba here and elsewhere in the novel.

'Who is Mr Boldwood?' said Bathsheba.
 'A gentleman-farmer at Upper Weatherbury.'
 'Married?'
 'No, Miss.'
 'How old is he?' 5
 'Forty I should say – very handsome – rather stern looking.'
 'What a bother this dusting is! I am always in some unfortunate plight or other,' Bathsheba said complainingly. 'Why should he enquire about Fanny?'
 'O because, as she had no friends in her childhood, he took her and put her to school, and got her her place here under your uncle. He's a very kind man that way, 10 but Lord – there!'

'What?'
 'Never was such a hopeless man for a woman! He's been courted by sixes and sevens – all the girls gentle and simple for miles round have tried him. Jane Perkins worked at him for two months like a slave, and the two Miss Taylors spent a year 15 upon him, and he cost Farmer Ives's daughter nights of tears and twenty pounds worth of new clothes, but Lord – the money might as well have been thrown out of the window.'

A little boy came up at this moment and looked in upon them. This child was one of the Coggans, (Smallburys and Coggans were as common among the families 20 of this district as the Avons and Derwents among our rivers), and he always had a loosened tooth or a cut finger to show to particular friends, which he did with a complacent air of being thereby elevated above the common herd of afflictionless humanity – to which exhibition people were expected to say 'Poor child' with a dash of congratulation as well as pity. 25

'I've got a pen-nee!' said Master Coggan in a scanning tone.
 'Well – who gave it you Teddy?' said Liddy.
 'Mis-terr Bold-wood! He gave it to me for opening the gate.'
 'What did he say?'
 'He said, where are you going my little man, and I said, to Miss Everdene's, 30 please, and he said, she is an old woman, isn't she, my little man? and I said yes.'

'You naughty child! What did you say that for?'
 'Cause he gave me the penny!'
 'What a pucker everything is in!' said Bathsheba, discontentedly when the child had gone. 'Get away Mary-ann, or go on with your scrubbing, or do something! You 35 ought to be married by this time, and not here troubling me.'

'Ay Miss – so I did. But what between the poor men I won't have, and the rich men who won't have me, I stand forlorn as a pelican in the wilderness. Ah, poor soul of me!'

'Did anybody ever want to marry you, Miss?' Liddy ventured to ask when they were again alone. 'Lots of 'em I dare say?' 40

Bathsheba paused as if about to refuse a reply, but the temptation to say Yes since it really was in her power, was irresistible by 'Sweet-and-twenty'.

'A man wanted to once,' she said in a highly experienced tone, and the image of Gabriel Oak (as the farmer) rose before her. 45

'How nice it must seem!' said Liddy, with the fixed features of mental realization.
 'And you wouldn't have him?'

'He wasn't quite good enough for me.'

'How sweet to be able to do disdain when most of us are glad to say Thank you! I seem I hear it. "No Sir – I'm your better," or, "Kiss my foot, Sir; my face is for mouths of consequence." And did you love him, Miss?'

50

'Oh, no. But I rather liked him.'

WALT WHITMAN: Selected Poems from Leaves of Grass

- 6 Either (a) Discuss some of the uses and effects of Whitman's presentation of work in his poetry. You should refer to three poems in your answer.
- Or (b) Analyse the following poem, showing what it adds to your understanding of Whitman's methods and concerns in the selection as a whole.

Whoever You Are Holding Me Now in Hand

Whoever you are holding me now in hand,
 Without one thing all will be useless,
 I give you fair warning before you attempt me further,
 I am not what you supposed, but far different.
 Who is he that would become my follower? 5
 Who would sign himself a candidate for my affections?

The way is suspicious, the result uncertain, perhaps destructive,
 You would have to give up all else, I alone would expect to be your sole and exclusive standard,
 Your novitiate would even then be long and exhausting, 10
 The whole past theory of your life and all conformity to the lives around you would have to be abandon'd, Therefore release me now before troubling yourself any further,
 let go your hand from my shoulders,
 Put me down and depart on your way. 15

Or else by stealth in some wood for trial,
 Or back of a rock in the open air,
 (For in any roof'd room of a house I emerge not, nor in company,
 And in libraries I lie as one dumb, a gawk, or unborn, or dead,)
 But just possibly with you on a high hill, first watching lest any 20 person for miles around approach unawares,
 Or possibly with you sailing at sea, or on the beach of the sea or some quiet island,
 Here to put your lips upon mine I permit you,
 With the comrade's long-dwelling kiss or the new husband's kiss, 25
 For I am the new husband and I am the comrade.

Or if you will, thrusting me beneath your clothing,
 Where I may feel the throbs of your heart or rest upon your hip,
 Carry me when you go forth over land or sea;
 For thus merely touching you is enough, is best, 30
 And thus touching you would I silently sleep and be carried eternally.

But these leaves conning you con at peril,
 For these leaves and me you will not understand,
 They will elude you at first and still more afterward, I will certainly 35
 elude you,
 Even while you should think you had unquestionably caught me, behold!
 Already you see I have escaped from you.

For it is not for what I have put into it that I have written this book,	40
Nor is it by reading it you will acquire it,
Nor do those know me best who admire me and vauntingly praise me,
Nor will the candidates for my love (unless at most a very few)
prove victorious,	45
Nor will my poems do good only, they will do just as much evil, perhaps more,
For all is useless without that which you may guess at many times and not hit, that which I hinted at;
Therefore release me and depart on your way.	50

TURN OVER FOR QUESTION 8.

JAMES JOYCE: Dubliners

- 8 Either (a) Discuss some of the ways in which Joyce presents the experience of young people in Dubliners. In your answer, you should refer to at least two stories.
- Or (b) Analyse the effects of the writing in the following passage, considering Joyce's methods of characterisation, here and elsewhere in Dubliners.

In her days of courtship Mr Kernan had seemed to her a not ungallant figure: and she still hurried to the chapel door whenever a wedding was reported and, seeing the bridal pair, recalled with vivid pleasure how she had passed out of the Star of the Sea Church in Sandymount, leaning on the arm of a jovial well-fed man who was dressed smartly in a frock-coat and lavender trousers and carried a silk hat gracefully balanced upon his other arm. After three weeks she had found a wife's life irksome and, later on, when she was beginning to find it unbearable, she had become a mother. The part of mother presented to her no insuperable difficulties and for twenty-five years she had kept house shrewdly for her husband. Her two eldest sons were launched. One was in a draper's shop in Glasgow and the other was clerk to a tea-merchant in Belfast. They were good sons, wrote regularly and sometimes sent home money. The other children were still at school. 5

Mr Kernan sent a letter to his office next day and remained in bed. She made beef-tea for him and scolded him roundly. She accepted his frequent intemperance as part of the climate, healed him dutifully whenever he was sick and always tried to make him eat a breakfast. There were worse husbands. He had never been violent since the boys had grown up and she knew that he would walk to the end of Thomas Street and back again to book even a small order. 10

Two nights after his friends came to see him. She brought them up to his bedroom, the air of which was impregnated with a personal odour, and gave them chairs at the fire. Mr Kernan's tongue, the occasional stinging pain of which had made him somewhat irritable during the day, became more polite. He sat propped up in the bed by pillows and the little colour in his puffy cheeks made them resemble warm cinders. He apologized to his guests for the disorder of the room but at the same time looked at them a little proudly, with a veteran's pride. 15

He was quite unconscious that he was the victim of a plot which his friends, Mr Cunningham, Mr M'Coy and Mr Power had disclosed to Mrs Kernan in the parlour. The idea had been Mr Power's but its development was entrusted to Mr Cunningham. Mr Kernan came of Protestant stock and, though he had been converted to the Catholic faith at the time of his marriage, he had not been in the pale of the Church for twenty years. He was fond, moreover, of giving side-thrusts at Catholicism. 20

Mr Cunningham was the very man for such a case. He was an elder colleague of Mr Power. His own domestic life was not very happy. People had great sympathy with him for it was known that he had married an unrepresentable woman who was an incurable drunkard. He had set up house for her six times; and each time she had pawned the furniture on him. 25

Every one had respect for poor Martin Cunningham. He was a thoroughly sensible man, influential and intelligent. His blade of human knowledge, natural astuteness particularized by long association with cases in the police courts, had been tempered by brief immersions in the waters of general philosophy. He was well informed. His friends bowed to his opinions and considered that his face was like Shakespeare's. 30

When the plot had been disclosed to her Mrs Kernan had said:
– I leave it all in your hands, Mr Cunningham. 35

After a quarter of a century of married life she had very few illusions left. Religion for her was a habit and she suspected that a man of her husband's age would not 40 45 change greatly before death. She was tempted to see a curious appropriateness in his accident and, but that she did not wish to seem bloody-minded, she would have told the gentlemen that Mr Kernan's tongue would not suffer by being shortened. However, Mr Cunningham was a capable man; and religion was religion. The scheme might do good and, at least, it could do no harm. Her beliefs were not extravagant. She believed steadily in the Sacred Heart as the most generally useful of all Catholic devotions and approved of the sacraments. Her faith was bounded by her kitchen but, if she was put to it, she could believe also in the banshee and in the Holy Ghost.

Mass Transit Buses

The governor's exhortations
 Were their launching pad!
 Away they careered!
 The masses cheered!
 Shed were tears of joy
 From eyes firmly closed.
 And when their eyes were opened
 The buses from the streets had vanished!

5

They were a drop of cold water on thirsty tongues of the masses
 For whom the launching
 Became only a wishful dream.

JEAN RHYS: Wide Sargasso Sea

- 11 Either (a) Discuss the role and characterisation of Daniel Cosway in the novel.
- Or (b) Analyse the effects of the writing in the following passage, considering how far it is characteristic of Rhys's presentation of Antoinette in the novel.

There is one window high up – you cannot see out of it. My bed had doors but they have been taken away. There is not much else in the room. Her bed, a black press, the table in the middle and two black chairs carved with fruit and flowers. They have high backs and no arms. The dressing-room is very small, the room next to this one is hung with tapestry. Looking at the tapestry one day I recognized my mother dressed in an evening gown but with bare feet. She looked away from me, over my head just as she used to do. I wouldn't tell Grace this. Her name oughtn't to be Grace. Names matter, like when he wouldn't call me Antoinette, and I saw Antoinette drifting out of the window with her scents, her pretty clothes and her looking-glass. 5

There is no looking-glass here and I don't know what I am like now. I remember watching myself brush my hair and how my eyes looked back at me. The girl I saw was myself yet not quite myself. Long ago when I was a child and very lonely I tried to kiss her. But the glass was between us – hard, cold and misted over with my breath. Now they have taken everything away. What am I doing in this place and who am I? 10

The door of the tapestry room is kept locked. It leads, I know, into a passage. That is where Grace stands and talks to another woman whom I have never seen. Her name is Leah. I listen but I cannot understand what they say.

So there is still the sound of whispering that I have heard all my life, but these are different voices. 20

When night comes, and she has had several drinks and sleeps, it is easy to take the keys. I know now where she keeps them. Then I open the door and walk into their world. It is, as I always knew, made of cardboard. I have seen it before somewhere, this cardboard world where everything is coloured brown or dark red or yellow that has no light in it. As I walk along the passages I wish I could see what is behind the cardboard. They tell me I am in England but I don't believe them. We lost our way to England. When? Where? I don't remember, but we lost it. Was it that evening in the cabin when he found me talking to the young man who brought me my food? I put my arms round his neck and asked him to help me. He said, 'I didn't know what to do, sir.' I smashed the glasses and plates against the porthole. I hoped it would break and the sea come in. A woman came and then an older man who cleared up the broken things on the floor. He did not look at me while he was doing it. The third man said drink this and you will sleep. I drank it and I said, 'It isn't like it seems to be.' – 'I know. It never is,' he said. And then I slept. When I woke it was a different sea. Colder. It was that night, I think, that we changed course and lost our way to England. This cardboard house where I walk at night is not England. 25

One morning when I woke I ached all over. Not the cold, another sort of ache. I saw that my wrists were red and swollen. Grace said, 'I suppose you're going to tell me that you don't remember anything about last night.' 30

'When was last night?' I said.

'Yesterday.'

'I don't remember yesterday.'

'Last night a gentleman came to see you,' she said.

'Which of them was that?' 35

Because I knew that there were strange people in the house. When I took the 45 keys and went into the passage I heard them laughing and talking in the distance, like birds, and there were lights on the floor beneath.

Turning a corner I saw a girl coming out of her bedroom. She wore a white dress and she was humming to herself. I flattened myself against the wall for I did not wish her to see me, but she stopped and looked round. She saw nothing but shadows, I took care of that, but she didn't walk to the head of the stairs. She ran. She met another girl and the second girl said, 'Have you seen a ghost?' – 'I didn't see anything but I thought I felt something.' – 'That is the ghost,' the second one said and they went down the stairs together.
